(O) ORGANIC viticulture is when the grower concentrates more on growing a healthy vine, by developing nutritious soil and a balanced ecosystem without the use of artificial fertilizers and pesticides.

(B) BIODYNAMIC viticulture takes it a step further and takes in to account the spiritual side of things, including running the vineyard and winery by lunar cycles. The grower sees his vineyard as a single living entity, promotes biodiversity and believes there are underlying natural forces governing all the stages of growth and production. A lot of biodynamic producers use only natural yeast, minimal or no sulphur and sometimes no filtration.

(N) NATURAL WINE has no true definable measure, but the order of the day is absolute minimal intervention. The organically or biodynamically grown grapes travel from the vineyard to the winery, are crushed, gently put in a vat, fermentation takes place naturally, the wine settles and is then bottled. A return to how wines historically used to be made.

(VE) VEGAN WINES

When filtering the drinks prior to bottling, companies can use things like isinglass (from fish bladder,) gelatine, egg whites, and sea shells, among other things. These products grab onto the impurities and make it easier to catch them in the filters, though there are many animal-free alternatives in use.

Testalonga Cortez Chenin Blanc Craig Hawkins, rich, round, mineral, top South African Chenin! It has a beautiful bright golden colour with aromas of wild honey and freshly baked bread which contrast with its dry, very racy with tangible sinewy texture. VODKA / EAU DE VIE

25ml

ELEMENT 29 VODKA, LONDON 40%abv

Its supreme heat conductivity allows gentle, precise distillation. Copper's unique chemical properties remove ugly tasting sulphur compounds from the distillate that would otherwise taint the flavour of the vodka. Lesser spirits mask these flavour taints with artificial additives or attempt to filter them out with anything from activated charcoal to diamonds. Element 29 vodka is so pure that neither flavouring, nor filtration is necessary - allowing a full expression of intrinsic natural flavour. Copper is what sets our vodka apart, and why we call it Element 29.
